The Year of the Internet

The man who gave us the means

William Shockley, PhD

William Bradford Shockley was born in London of American parents, and home-schooled in Palo Alto, California, before attending Palo Alto Military Academy and Hollywood High School. He earned a bachelor's degree from Caltech, and a Ph.D. at M.I.T. for a dissertation titled "Calculations of Wave Functions for Electrons in Sodium Chloride Crystals."

This interest led Dr. Shockley to the invention of the transistor in 1947, a momentous development with consequences that simply cannot be overstated. Recognized as a giant in his day, the man was showered with honors.

He received the Medal for Merit in 1946, for his work with the War Department; the Morris Leibmann Memorial Prize of the Institute of Radio Engineers in 1952; the following year, the Oliver E. Buckley Solid State Physics Prize of the American Physical Society, and a year later the Cyrus B. Comstock Award of the National Academy of Sciences. The crowning honour - the Nobel Prize for Physics - was bestowed on him in 1956, jointly with his two former colleagues at the Bell Telephone Laboratories, John Bardeen and Walter H. Brattain.

Stormfront Celebrates Ten Years on the Web

The New Press Comes Of Age

In 1963 he was selected as recipient of the Holley Medal of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Dr. Shockley was a member of the Scientific Advisory Panel of the U.S. Army since 1951 and he had served on the Air Force Scientific Advisory Board since 1958. In 1962 he was appointed to the President's Scientific Advisory Committee.

But the honorariums would abruptly stop after 1963, the year Dr. Shockley embarked on the most important work of his life.

According to Time magazine's feature upon naming him one the Top 100 figures of the 20th century:

> The transistor was born just before Christmas 1947 when John Bardeen and Walter Brattain, two scientists working for William Shockley at Bell Labs in Murray Hill, New Jersey, observed that when electrical signals were applied to contacts on a crystal of germanium, the output power was larger than the input. Shockley ... searched for an explanation of the effect from what was then known of the quantum physics of semiconductors. In a remarkable series of insights made over a few short weeks, he greatly extended the understanding of semiconductor materials and developed the underlying theory of another, much more robust amplifying device — a kind of sandwich made of a crystal with varying impurities added, which came to be known as the junction transistor. By 1951 Shockley's coworkers made his semiconductor sandwich and demonstrated that it behaved much as his theory had predicted.

Shockley went on to establish Shockley Semiconductor in Palo Alto, California - the first high-tech outpost in what was to become known as Silicon Valley.

Time saw fit to have the Top 100 feature written by none other than Gordon Moore, an early employee of Shockley Semiconductor, and a man who betrayed Shockley, purloined his work, and now sneers at his genius. In Moore's own words:

> ...several of us went over Shockley's head, directly to Arnold Beckman, who had financed the start-up, suggesting that Shockley be removed from direct management of the lab and function only as a technical consultant.
> We grossly overestimated our power. Shockley survived our insurrection, and when it failed, we felt we had to look elsewhere for jobs. In the process of searching, we became convinced that our best course was to set up our own company to complete Shockley's original goal...to make a commercial silicon transistor.

Moore, in fact, co-founded Intel, building a fabulous fortune on the work he had taken with him from Shockley Semiconductor. Moore finally dismisses the man who had made it all possible:

> Unintentionally, Shockley contributed to one of the most spectacular and successful industry expansions in history.

In 1963 Shockley left the electronics industry and accepted an appointment at Stanford. There he became interested in the origins of human intelligence and formulated the theory of dysgenics, which Dr. Shockley defined as "the study of mechanisms adverse to human genetic quality, particularly retrogressive evolution through disproportionate reproduction of the genetically disadvantaged." Using data from the U.S. Army's pre-induction IQ tests, he concluded that African Americans were inherently less intelligent than Caucasians — an analysis validated by all reputable psychometric research since.

At Stanford in 1970 Dr. Shockley established the Foundation for Research and Education on Eugenics and Dysgenics, focusing on the study of genetic factors in human intelligence. Included on the board was famed University of California professor emeritus of paleontology Dr. Ralph W. Chaney, Berkeley, the author of numerous books, and, like Dr. Shockley, a member of the prestigious National

Blogs open fire; Rather, Mapes go down

"Blog" is slang for "web log", an internet web page any private citizen with a few bucks and a modem can put up for the world to see. Some have fancy software, some don't. Some are just word processor to HTML conversions, the internet version of a typed up essay. That's all a blog is.

Mary Mapes

And that's all it took to bring down multimillionaire talking head Dan Rather, arguably one of the most powerful men in the MSM - Mainstream Media - and his comrade-in-spin, longtime CBS producer Mary Mapes. Briefly, Dan and Mary were caught using bogus documents to back up one of their standard hit pieces on Republican pols, in this case, famously, George W. Bush. It was business as usual for the Democratic Duo, both having made long and lucrative careers spinning stories to the Left, and from their perch at the very summit of the television news power structure, Dan and Mary would have tilted election results in favor of their own candidate, as they had done so many times before.

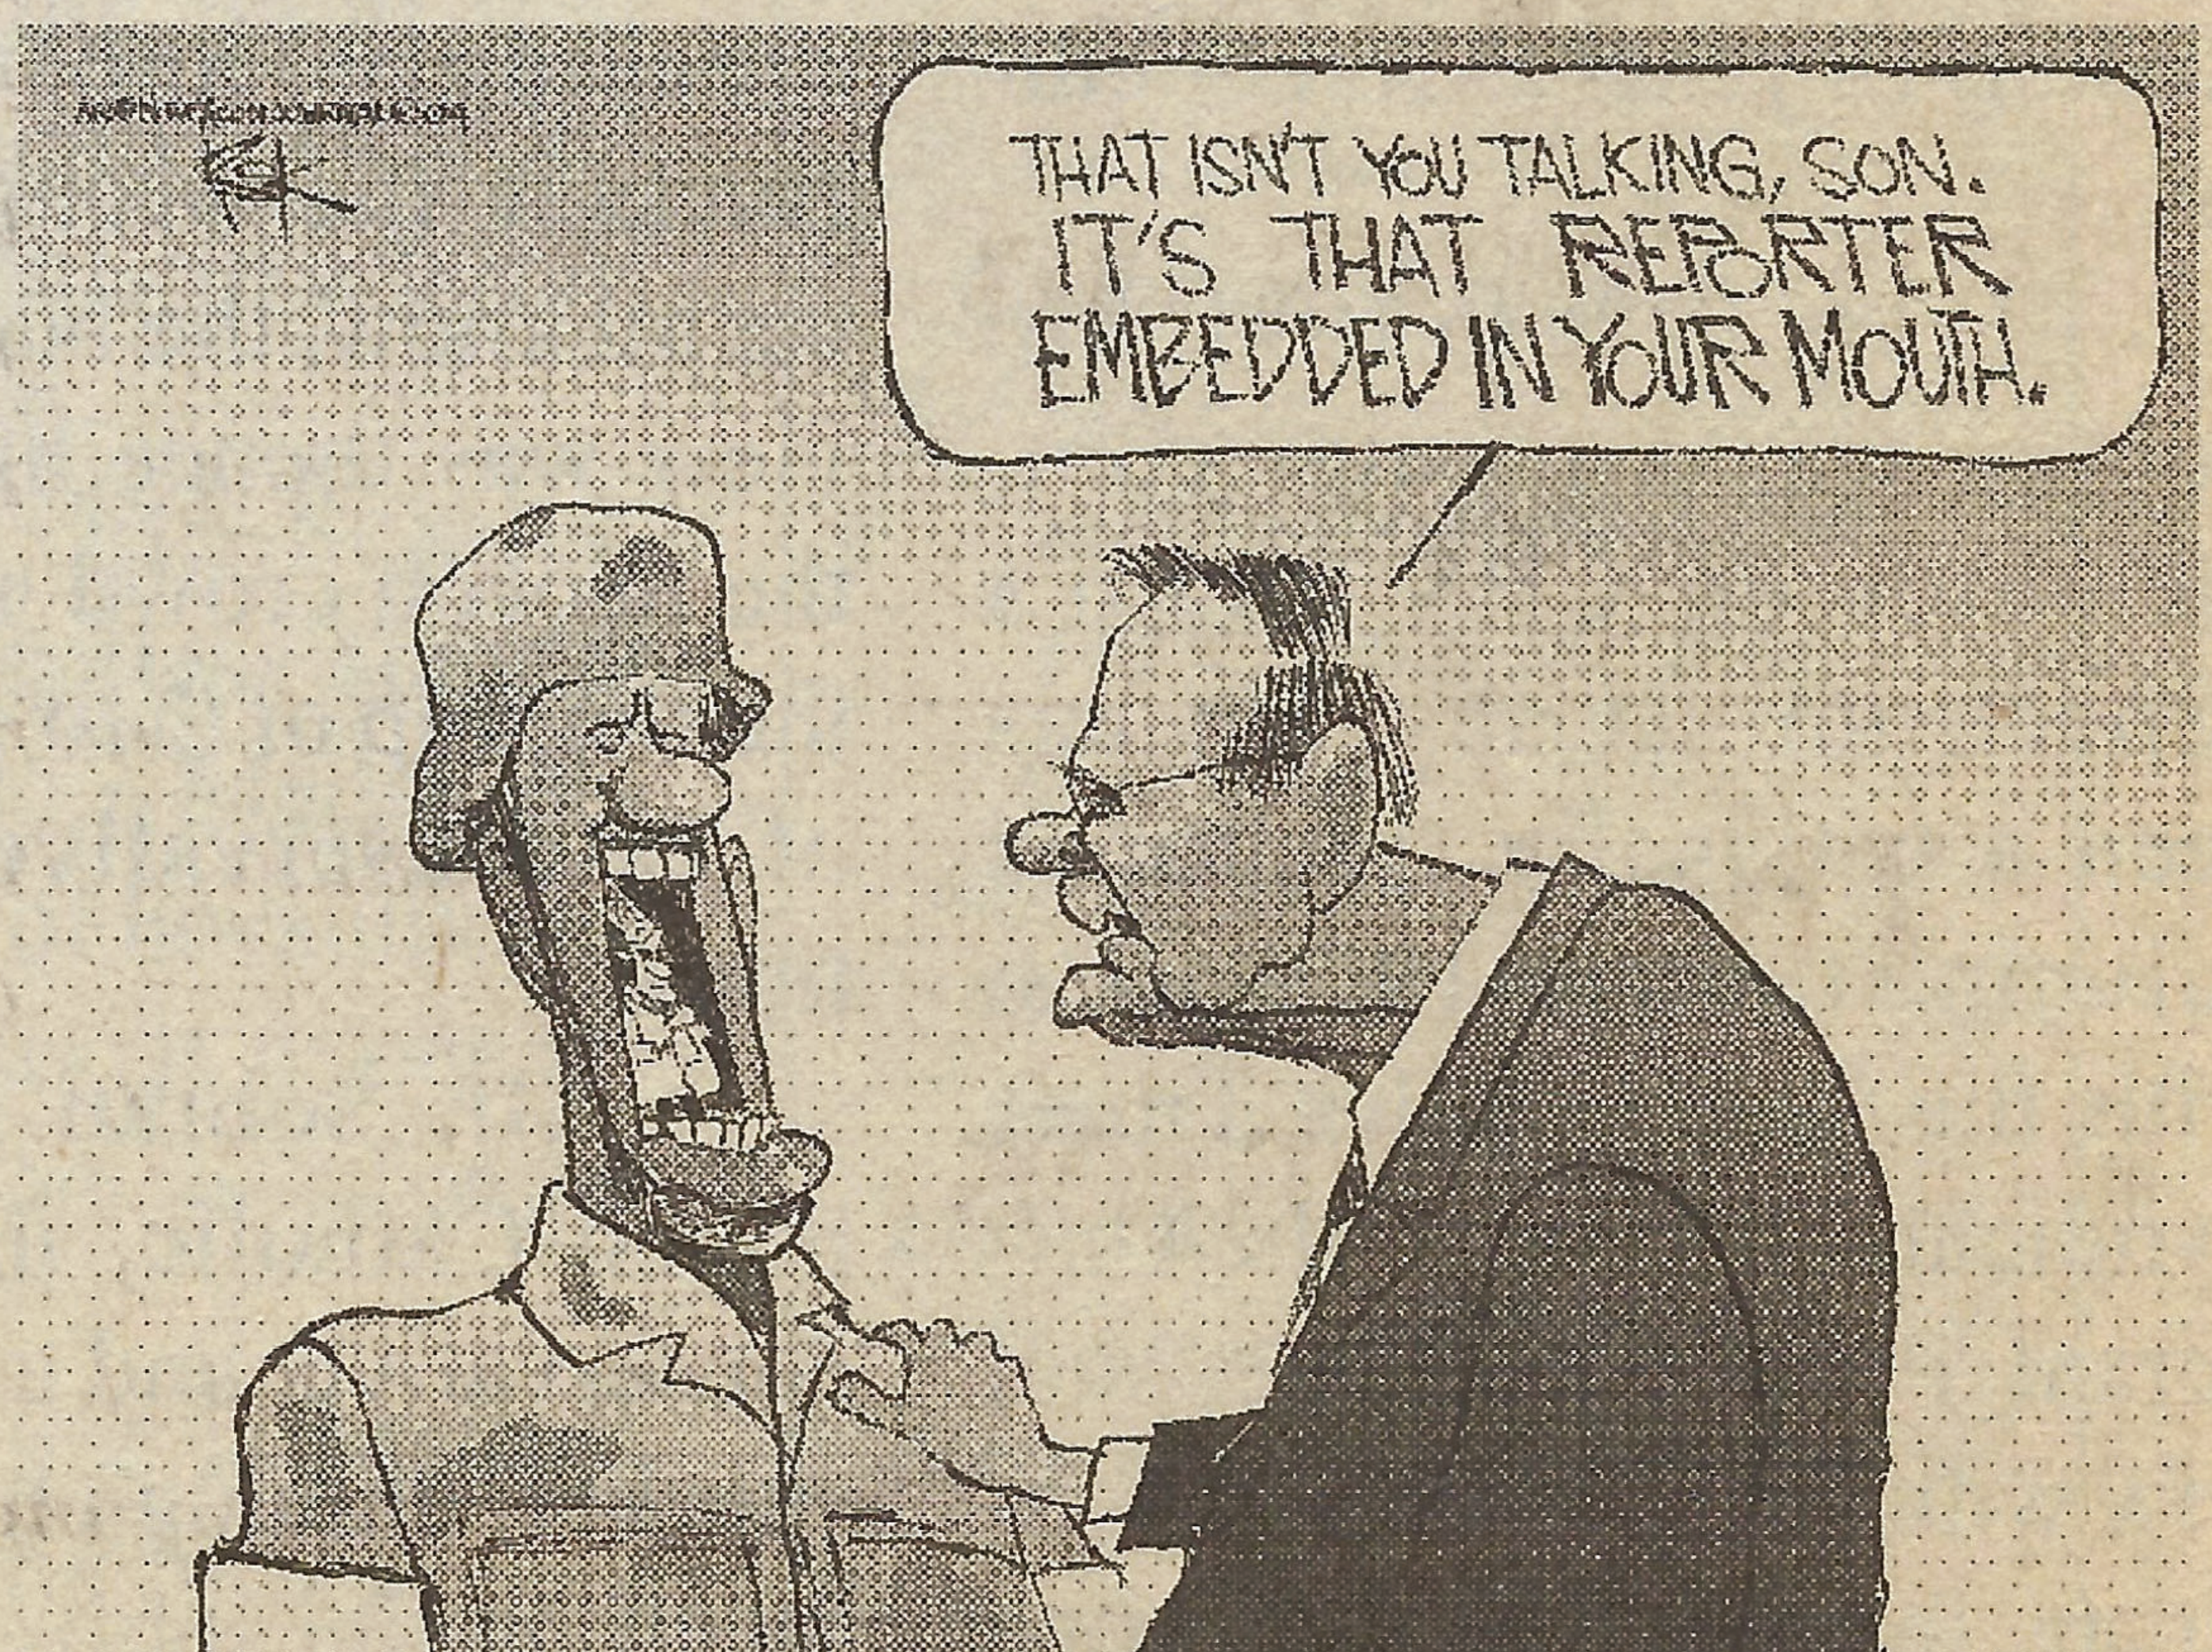
Dan and friend

But...not this time. Someone noticed that the documents Dan offered to substantiate his routine hatchet job were printed out in a font called Times New Roman, a font not found on any typewriters, a font used exclusively in computer word processing. How could documents supposedly typewritten, but using Times New Roman font, be genuine? The bloggers started blogging bloody murder - Powerlineblog.com gets most of the credit - and soon more questions were asked, and the story got uglier by the day. The man providing the documents, Powerline pointed out, was a rabidly partisan Democrat retired military officer, a crank with a lifelong hatred of none other than George W. Bush. The technical experts credited by CBS as having validated the documents turned out to have done no such thing, and for that matter, weren't technical experts in the field at all.

Like talk radio, internet blogging is a citizens' realm, an alternative media for those shut out of the top-down Leftist dominated "mainstream" press: paleoconservatives, libertarians, Constitutionalists, the Old Right, the New Right, the Racial Right, the nationalists - in short, everybody not a Leftist. Together this eclectic majority constitutes not just a new ombudsman for the Old Press, but a New Press in itself. With credibility in tatters, big names disgraced, print circulation plummeting, and thousands in the blogosphere hounding after every hint of bias and hokum, the MSM is in profound crisis. Their monopoly on the news is evaporating. The pioneer days of the iconoclastic small town newspaper editors have returned. No longer with the clanking of an old press in the back room and ink fumes wafting through the office, but with the hum of the hard disk and the cheeping of the modem, the unstoppable American Free Press is back - with a vengeance.

Not sure whether to wind a watch or bark at the moon, Dan Rather announced his resignation after 24 years as CBS anchor. With his credibility as thin as turnip soup, his legacy shakier than cafeteria Jell-O, and his fingernails beginning to sweat, Rather reached the point where he had his back to the wall, his shirttails on fire, and the bill collector at the door.

After being consistently beaten like a rented mule in the ratings, CBS execs apparently decided they'd rather walk through a furnace in a gasoline suit than keep him in the anchor chair. In announcing his departure, Rather insisted his grasp of reality was still spandex tight. But if you believe that, you'll believe rocks can grow.



THAT ISN'T YOU TALKING, SON. IT'S THAT REPORTER EMBEDDED IN YOUR MOUTH.

American Renaissance

The incomparable Jared Taylor, speaker, writer, financial consultant, bon vivant, author of Paved With Good Intentions, director of the New Century Foundation, host of the absolutely-must-attend biannual American Renaissance conferences since 1992, not only publishes the American Renaissance magazine both in print and as a PDF e-magazine, but also provides an invaluable newsportal on amren.com.

Here, in their own words, is a synopsis of the site:

What We Believe

Race is an important aspect of individual and group identity. Of all the fault lines that divide society—language, religion, class, ideology—it is the most prominent and divisive. Race and racial conflict are at the heart of the most serious challenges the Western World faces in the 21st century.

The problems of race cannot be solved without adequate understanding. Attempts to gloss over the significance of race or even to deny its reality only make problems worse. Progress requires the study of all aspects of race, whether historical, cultural, or biological.

American Renaissance is a monthly magazine that has been published since 1991. It has been called "a literate, undeceived journal of race, immigration and the decline of civility." We consider it America's premiere publication of racial-realist thought, and we invite all users of this page to subscribe. The paper version is delivered through the mail, and the PDF version—with identical contents—is delivered to e-mail addresses.

Who We Are

American Renaissance and its web page are run by Jared Taylor, Stephen Webster, Ian Jobling, and George McDaniel. Our mailing address is Box 527, Oakton, VA 22124 and our telephone number is (703) 716-0900.

A National Treasure: Joe Sobran

From his bio on sobran.com, a site well worth visiting regularly:

Joe Sobran received his B.A. in English from Eastern Michigan University and pursued graduate studies in English, specializing in Shakespeare. From 1969 to 1970 he taught English on a fellowship and lectured on Shakespeare.

In 1972, he went to work for National Review Magazine, beginning what would be a 21-year stint, including 18 years as senior editor.

From 1979 to 1991, Mr. Sobran was a regular commentator on CBS Radio's "Spectrum" series. He has been a nationally syndicated columnist since 1979, first with the Los Angeles Times Syndicate, then with the Universal Press Syndicate, and now with Griffin Internet Syndicate, for which he writes two columns per week, which are later posted on this site. He also writes the weekly column "Washington Watch" for The Wanderer, a weekly Catholic newspaper, which is also posted on this site.

© Griffin

Mr. Sobran was ejected from the National Review for saying the "J" word, a parting of the ways he considered long overdue, and which Mr. Sobran engineered deliberately by publishing an editorial he knew would rub the increasingly apostate Bill Buckley the wrong way. As we all know, the National Review was thence hijacked by the neocon crowd and is now the flagship of their pirate fleet of ex-conservative publications.

Mr. Sobran is a hidebound Catholic, immovable conservative, and a delightful speaker; although he does not dwell on the subject, he does not shrink from speaking frankly of the Tribe, as we can see in a recent review of Kevin MacDonald's work:

Dr. Kevin MacDonald, of California State University at Long Beach, has written a learned trilogy on what he calls "Judaism as an evolutionary strategy," analyzing Jewish conduct through the ages, right up to the present. Most recently he has written three penetrating essays in The Occidental Quarterly, one of them "Neoconservatism as a Jewish Movement"; it shows the movement's roots in the Trotskyite Jewish left of yore, as well as its ancient roots in Jewish tribalism. It's a fascinating dynamic.

One quibble. I'm allergic to the word "evolutionary"; the pattern seems to me quite conscious and intelligent, and indeed everything MacDonald adduces confirms this: the cunning combination of group self-interest with pseudo-universalist rhetoric (liberal, conservative, Marxist, democratic, patriotic, etcetera) designed to fool outsiders; the long and vengeful historical memory; the use of guilt and victimhood for advantage; the severe measures of group self discipline. Neoconservatism is just a new application of some very old tactics.

Number One

Stormfront is indisputably the world's premiere White Nationalist website, first going online in 1995 as a BBS in support of David Duke's electoral campaign. Since then, Stormfront has gained worldwide recognition and more than a little notoriety, especially due to a wildly popular discussion forum boasting more than 50,000 registered members. Out of the hundreds of thousands if not millions of established sites on the world wide web, Stormfront is among the busiest, averaging over 30,000 unique visits every day.

In the words of Stormfront's founder and director, Don Black:

"Stormfront made history ten years ago, going online with the first White Nationalist website.

The gift of the Internet meant an alternative to the controlled news media. We brought our message to hundreds of thousands those first few months, and today we reach millions. And we continue to grow, transforming an online community into real world activism."

It's hard to believe, for those of us involved, that it's been ten years already; but then again, it's only been ten years. Stormfront's appeal has trended steadily upwards, drawing members from all over the world, including European nations like France and Germany where the concept of free speech means freedom to agree with the government, and punishment otherwise.

A search for White Nationalism on any search engine consistently returns Stormfront at the top of the list, and the most popular search engine recently returned Stormfront.org in the first five positions.

Stormfront was always more than a discussion board, of course, and as Mr. Black points out, more than half of the 30,000 daily visitors are interested in the front page features, especially the seminal article "What Is Racism?", by Thomas Jackson - making it possibly the most widely read essay on race and culture in the world.

But the discussion board is certainly the dynamic heart of the project. The forum has evolved in three distinct phases: the "old board", a free-for-all rumble of wildly disparate White Nationalist factions, with more arguments than consensus, a period during which people from all over the world, once isolated, were getting to know each other, share ideas, hammer out positions, and more often than we'd like to see, spark furious enmity. Though popular, the more heated participants were taking Stormfront in a direction the founder was not entirely comfortable with. Having in mind more the meeting hall ambience than the parking lot brawl, Mr. Black closed the board temporarily, recruited an all-new staff, and reinaugurated the forum, admonishing the SF community to adhere to a set of thoughtful guidelines.

Growing steadily, Stormfront attracted not only enthusiastic White Nationalists but the brooding and baleful attention of the New World Order establishment and anti-White fanatics. In 2002, Otto Schilly, a minister of the German government, publicly announced his intention to hire hackers to destroy our internet communications and bring down our sites, using German tax money to do it. Soon thereafter Stormfront began experiencing severe denial of service attacks and became available only sporadically, finally disappearing altogether for several days in early 2003.

Don was able to recover the site and: "In April 2003, we were able to upgrade our server hardware as a result of over 160 members contributing a total of $6000. We are extremely grateful for all those dedicated White activists."

This event marked the emergence of Stormfront as a true web community, with a cadre of loyal "Sustaining Members" and even faster growth, and backed by the finest computer equipment available. While the enginery of the cyber-marxists is still aimed at Stormfront and the denial of service attacks continue, the site has become a virtual fortress. Support has strengthened even to the point that Stormfront recently awarded scholarship grants in a popular essay contest.

Despite Otto Schilly, despite the relentless slander in the Mainstream Media, despite the threat of lawsuits and despite the marxist cyber attacks, Stormfront is stronger than ever.

Dan Rather is history. Stormfront is the future.

Carol On The Web

Remember Carol On The Web? Can't find it now? Here ya go: www.public-action.com/

True or false, the holocaust story has had, and continues to have, big political ramifications. After the war, it was used to marshal popular support for establishing the state of Israel, and today the holocaust story continues to lend moral legitimacy to Israel.

Upon that legitimacy, hundreds of billions of US dollars have been transferred to Israel. According to an article by Donald Neff (Washington Report on Middle East Affairs, Jan-Feb. 1997, p. 74):

". . . the (US) aid program to Israel has amounted to the largest voluntary transfer of wealth and technology in history, far more than all American aid given to rehabilitate Western Europe under the Marshall Plan after World War II."

The horror of the holocaust story has another important effect: It shields the political activity of Jews from public scrutiny. No need to belabor this point: one cannot critically comment upon the political activities of Jews or Israel as one might comment upon the activities of Catholics or the Vatican. Those who are courageous enough to comment will certainly endure public branding: "Nazi!" "Jew-baiter!" "Anti semite!"

But, perhaps most importantly, the holocaust story shows that the Jews are a special people, essentially different from the rest of humanity. Their suffering is unique in human history. No race, nowhere, at any time, as been subject to such persecution.

Theologically, one might say that the Jews have been sanctified by their suffering, as the Christian saints were sanctified by their suffering.

In the holocaust story, Hitler and the Jews are positioned as countervailing forces in a perfect polarity: At one pole, Hitler, the unique embodiment of Human Evil. At the other pole, those he tried to destroy, the Jews, the unique embodiment of Human Good.

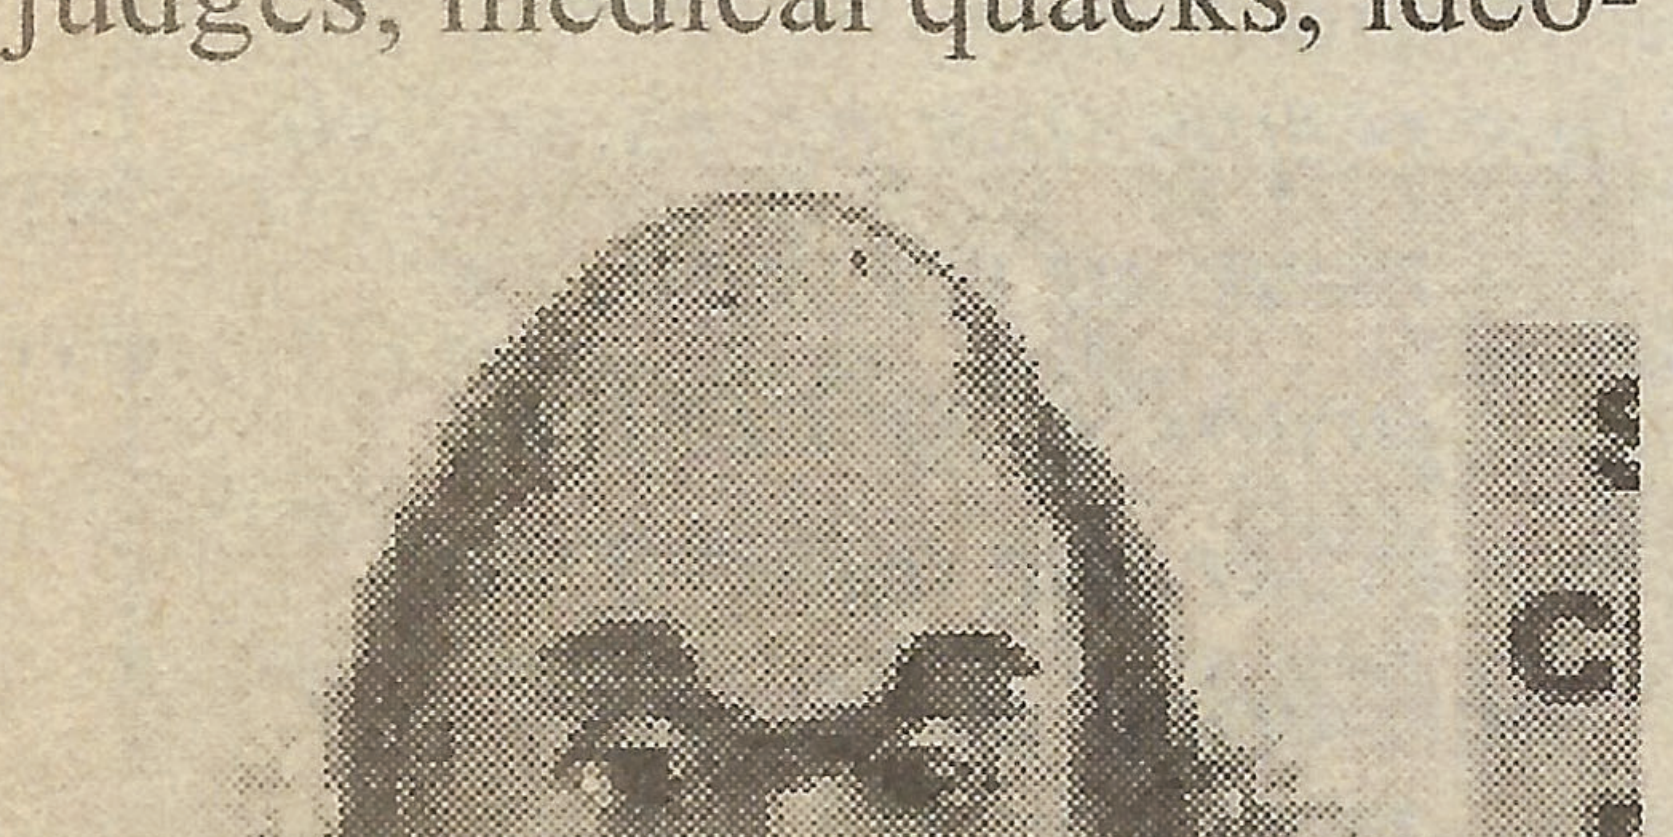
Weird Republic

I have never heard of Thomas Clough published elsewhere but on the Net, though he can write circles around 99 and 9/10 of the mainstream pundits - which, OK, isn't saying much, but Clough would also stand with the very best the conservatives have to offer. And that is saying a lot. Clough is woefully under-referenced and his website, Weird Republic, is far and away editor's choice for the unsung genius award. Mr. Clough introduces his blog:

"Weird Republic will introduce you to many dangerous utopians and a good many scoundrels: politicians, overbearing bureaucrats, activist judges, medical quacks, ideologically-driven academics, purveyors of bogus science, traitors, and other architects of our current condition. You will also meet some defenders of freedom."



From "Pollard the Spy" by Clough

Here's a sample:

The Year of Things Going Haywire

Some cultures, our own included, have been punctuated by the contributions of talented homosexuals, but the central dynamic of every healthy human society has always been robustly heterosexual. This must be true in every instance because same-sex coupling is a biological dead end. The crippling inability of homosexuals to connect emotionally with persons of their complementary gender renders them incapable of even a faltering half step toward a future generation without clinical intervention. Neither gay relationships nor gay culture is necessary for the maintenance of a healthy society. On the contrary, there is much about gay culture that is patently damaging to the moral matrix of any traditional society.

On Election Day of 2004, the adults of America were given opportunities to reaffirm the time-honored model of marriage, to confirm its very definition. Americans went to the polls in record numbers, determined to buttress their country's traditional moral matrix. For gay radicals it was a day filled with disappointing ironies and unintended consequences. Before we take stock of the election results, let's review the events that motivated so many average Americans to make their voices heard.

The snappy team of homosexual litigators whose courtroom challenges had prompted a "civil union" accommodation in Vermont were disappointed. They had wanted nothing less than the full legitimizing power of a marriage privilege for the ragtag band of same-sex-fixated paraphiliacs that calls itself the gay/lesbian/bisexual "community." This oddball coalition desperately wanted respect, and they were in no mood to let social custom and the accumulated wisdom of thousands of years of human experience stand in their way.

After Vermont, the gays with law degrees hunted about for another soft target, a state blessed with wistful Left-leaning utopian judges and also encumbered by a state constitution with procedural rules so complicated that the will of the people could not hope to keep pace with the edicts of philosopher-king jurists. Their perfect choice was Massachusetts. © Thomas Clough

Institute for Historical Review

Founded in 1978, the Institute for Historical Review is a not-for-profit research, educational and publishing center devoted to truth and accuracy in history. The IHR continues the tradition of historical revisionism pioneered by distinguished historians such as Harry Elmer Barnes, A.J.P. Taylor, Charles Tansill, Paul Rassinier and William H. Chamberlin.

The purpose of the IHR is, in the words of Barnes, to "bring history into accord with the facts." To this end, it sheds light on suppressed information about key chapters of history, especially twentieth century history, that have special relevance today.

With growing support from across the United States and around the world, the IHR works for truthfulness in history, to restore sanity in America's foreign policy, to liberate people from pseudo-religious intimidation, and for the First Amendment right of free speech. The IHR also works to tear down barriers to international peace and understanding by encouraging greater understanding of the root causes, nature and consequences of war. Nowhere is this work more important than here in the United States, where untold billions of dollars are squandered yearly in preparation for war and conflict.

Certainly the best-known and most controversial aspect of the IHR's work has been its treatment of the Holocaust issue. Over the years, the IHR has published detailed books and numerous probing essays by scholars such as Dr. Arthur Butz of Northwestern University and French professor Robert Faurisson that call into question the orthodox Holocaust extermination story. The Institute does not "deny the Holocaust." It does not dispute the suffering and terrible persecution of European Jews during the Second World War. At the same time, though, a growing body of documentary, forensic and other evidence shows that much of what we're told about the "Holocaust" is exaggerated or simply not true.

The Green Board

whitesurvival.net

Longtime White Nationalism activist, Stormfront senior staffer, and all-around good guy Rick Kicklighter offers a slightly different flavor in WN discussion boards: White Survival Forums, aka the Green Board. With an able assist from Stormfront's own Goddess of Moderation, WSF features a more family oriented, back porch ambience, a neighborly barbeque respite from the intensity of politically focused SF. Even recipes, my friends, including Manly Recipes, and Rick himself holding forth on the strategy of Colonization By Beer. Don't miss it.

Who would have thought that an appliance repair infosite would also be one of the most entertaining and politically edgy blogs on the Web?

Here a good citizen can find out how to fix his wife's dryer and join a radical Libertarian secessionist movement at the same time.

Also known as Appliantology®, The Oracle of Appliance Enlightenment, fixitnow.com's webmaster, the guru of disrespectful dishwashers and recalcitrant refrigerators, the Samurai Appliance Repairman, holds a master's degree in engineering, loves a good beer, and cultivates a bizarre sense of humor. His motto: Kicking Appliance Butt All Over The Globe! His promise: "If I can't help you fix your appliance and make you 100% satisfied, I will come to your home and slice open my belly, spilling my steaming entrails onto your floor."

The Samurai runs an appliance repair forum where one will find tips on debugging electronic washer control units alonside such political pearls as:

Our government has become a predator, not just on other nations— meddling where it has no business— but on its own citizens, confiscating our natural freedoms and doling them back out, onesy-twosy, as "rights."

It attacks us economically with confiscatory taxation and then tries to tell us how to live, with whom we will consort, and a whole host of other victim-less "crimes."

And now, with the Orwellian-named "Patriot Act," we live in a nation that feels eerily similar to the conditions I lived in while serving in the US Navy back in the 70's. This very discussion thread could be considered an act of terrorism under the "Patriot Act."

We are free people, free by virtue of being born human— it is our birthright. I don't need some gubmint in DC to tell me what rights I have. The Constitution was written to put limits on the government, not on me. It is, therefore, my duty to rebel when our government becomes oppressive and tyrannical, opposed to the natural conditions of human dignity and liberty.copyright fixitnow

Well worth a visit, and I'd be surprised if the Samurai doesn't make it onto every practical man's "favorites" list.

Academy of Science; anatomist Dr. John B.deC.M. Saunders; Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, world renowned for his work in physiology; the Hon. Ernst Gruening, Member of Congress from Alaska; Perry A. Lambird, an Oklahoma physician who obtained his M.D. degree at age 23; Dr. Stanley Porteus, a famed psychologist; and the star-crossed Sir Cyril Burt, a British pioneer of student psychology, statistical method, and a recognized expert on identical twins.

The Foundation postulated three theses to which members, directors and advisers adhered in greater or lesser degree:

That "current reproductive patterns threaten future generations with dysgenic deterioration."

That "significant research on dysgenics is both urgently needed and possible."

That "countermeasures acceptable in a democracy should be developed concurrently so that if research confirms the worst, dysgenic trends can be remedied by eugenics - the improvement of human genetic quality by applying the known laws of heredity."

His theories fortified by the research of the Foundation, Dr. Shockley warned of the "lowering of the quality of the population" through programs which continually encourage the interbreeding of humans at the lower end of the IQ-measurable achievement-performance spectrum. If the quality of the population is ever descending, the human race is running an ultimate peril, he believed.

"We believe that irrefutable evidence continues to accumulate for the inheritance of genetically controlled, socially maladaptive traits," he told the National Academy of Sciences. "We fear that fatuous beliefs in the power of welfare money, unaided by eugenic foresight, may contribute to the decline of human quality for all segments of society."

He recommended that "the public, the press, the government, and the scientific community seek facts relevant to hereditary aspects of our human quality problems. We believe that from such inquiry will inevitably come knowledge suggesting wise, humane and appropriate remedial legislation."

When William B. Shockley died on August 12, 1989, he regarded his work in genetics as more important than any role he played in creating the $130 billion semiconductor industry.

At Race & State we see Dr. Shockley's apparently disparate work in fact unified as can be said of few other great men. His brilliant insight and courage put racial theory on ever stronger scientific foundation, and he gave us the Internet, the Weapon of Mass Instruction, with which to propagate it. So armed, we will prevail.

Vdare

Named after Virginia Dare, the first White child born to the colonists on the North American continent, Vdare.com is the internet bastion of the paleoconservatives, featuring Steve Sailer, Paul Craig Roberts, Jared Taylor, and of course Peter Brimelow. The site is so popular and boasts such a distinguished ouevre that it has earned the baleful attention of the Red Eye and been made the subject of an "Intelligence Report" from the Southern Poverty Law Center - and we quote:

At a meeting of 'paleoconservatives,' former Forbes editor Peter Brimelow and others sound the alarm on non-white immigration

By Heidi Beirich and Mark Potok

NEW ORLEANS — They came from near and far, gathering inside the ritzy St. Louis Hotel for their 14th annual meeting.

There was Srdja Trifkovic, who says he is a "Byzantine man," not a Renaissance man, and who thinks that total economic collapse would be a good thing for white people. Former bank CEO David Hartman came to say that Social Security and Medicare should be halted so that whites will have more children to take care of them in their old age.

Sam Francis was there, too, comparing non-white immigrants to "foreign colonizers."

And then there was Peter Brimelow. Some might have expected the well-heeled financial commentator, book author and influential nativist intellectual to feel somewhat out of his element at this gathering of the very far right.

But these were very much Brimelow's people.

They call themselves paleoconservatives — but a more accurate term, and one that is actually used by many of those who attended the New Orleans meeting of the Rockford Institute's John Randolph Club, might be racial nationalists.

The club used to include libertarians and others with a variety of political views but, as chronicled in an important article by James Lubinskas, that has changed. The club has shrunk, become more politically isolated, and focused in on issues related to race.

Peter Brimelow exemplifies that change. In 1995, he published the bestselling Alien Nation, a book that argued that America is historically white-dominated and should stay that way.

By 1997, he was warning that by 2008 the GOP would no longer be able to compete in presidential elections because the racial makeup of the electorate would be changed by non-white immigration.

Today, the former senior editor at Forbes magazine edits an anti-immigration Web page that carries an array of frankly white supremacist and anti-Semitic essays. SPLC

Well, European American of course disputes that Vdare is "frankly white supremacist and anti-Semitic", as does Mr. Brimelow. As far as Heidi, Mark, and their paymaster Mo Dees are concerned, any White man who does not make himself a doormat for each and every non-White to trample is politically suspect. So what better endorsement for Mr. Brimelow's website could there be but this:

Editor's note: Based on evidence compiled by the Intelligence Report, the Southern Poverty Law Center is adding VDARE to its list of hate sites on the Web.

A signal honor, an official declaration of heresy by the high priests of PC, and the editor of EA will be proud to share the dungeons under the Poverty Palace with the likes of Peter Brimelow.
